Our Partnership Approach

Kellogg Executive Education attracts organizations that place a premium on continuous individual and organizational learning and value collaborating with a world-class university to make that happen. Organizations see us as more than a provider of educational programming. They choose us as a trusted partner to help meet their leadership development needs whether the focus is on individual career advancement, team empowerment, succession planning, igniting growth or overcoming any of the other myriad challenges of contemporary business.

As your partner, we earn your trust by investing time and resources in building a relationship based on a deep understanding of your organization’s mission, your challenges, your people and your culture. We integrate that understanding with our own knowledge and expertise in management practice and leadership effectiveness. Then, we collaborate with you to create highly focused, outcomes-oriented learning solutions.

APPLYING CROSS-DISCIPLINARY THINKING TO COMPLEX CHALLENGES

OUR CURRICULUM DESIGN TEAM AND PROCESS

Whatever your organization’s goal — whether it’s to ignite innovation, stimulate growth, shift product or market platforms, sharpen your competitive edge or align your enterprise across common goals — Kellogg collaborates with you to deliver a high-impact learning solution. Our cross-disciplinary curriculum design team begins each engagement by listening carefully to develop a big-picture view of your organization and a detailed understanding of your priorities and leadership needs.

Our team then defines the narrative arc of the curriculum and engineers a program focused on your desired outcomes and grounded in Kellogg’s distinctive approach to innovation and problem solving. Just as important as infusing the experience with intellectual rigor is ensuring that each participant engages fully while taking time for individual reflection and renewal, all critical to developing new insights and retaining new knowledge.
The challenges your organization faces today are rarely, if ever, confined to a single function or business discipline. They are complex problems that can only be solved by working in collaboration with cross-functional groups often including outside organizations or local and global communities. Kellogg’s cross-disciplinary approach to research, curriculum development and teaching addresses this complexity by aligning our thought leadership against the issues most critical to contemporary business practice.

This distinctive approach drives innovation and creates real-world insights for business leaders. It also informs our Executive Education learning program design, ensuring that your participants not only gain exposure to the most current thinking, but also learn how to put it to practical use in your organization.

OUR LEARNING APPROACH
We believe that learning is a process, not a single event. That’s why we place so much emphasis on collaboration and peer interaction in our programs. Believing that participants can learn as much from each other as they do in the classroom, we create an experience that incorporates both structured and informal learning opportunities.

Our dynamic mix of teaching methods and styles, designed specifically for Executive Education, ensures a rigorous, collaborative and immediate high-impact experience. This includes workshops, lectures, study groups and topic tables at meals. We support all of this with technology tools for synchronous and asynchronous learning before, during and after programs.
Casework, simulations and interactive group projects challenge participants to make the connections between academic theory and real-world practice.
BLENDING RIGOROUS ACADEMICS WITH PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE

KELLOGG EXECUTIVE EDUCATION FACULTY

Experts in organizational change, operations management, team building, entrepreneurship and the core business disciplines, our faculty members channel their research, thought leadership and experience into practical solutions to your organizational leadership challenges.

A carefully balanced mix of tenured faculty and seasoned professionals, Kellogg Executive Education faculty members are among the most respected leaders in their fields: senior faculty members from Kellogg and Northwestern, current and former C-level executives, government and military leaders, and experienced practitioners of the disciplines they teach. Together, they represent a dynamic blend of theory and practice, of thought leadership and its real-world application.

“Because the world is changing very quickly, we at Kellogg must stay a step ahead of contemporary business practice. I use the real world as my laboratory so I can keep advancing continuously. Rarely do I teach the same thing exactly the same way twice.”

OUR LIVING AND LEARNING ENVIRONMENT

Kellogg Executive Education offers an immersive learning experience. An academic retreat, with both living and learning spaces, the James L. Allen Center features technology-enabled classrooms complemented by comfortable gathering and group study spaces that foster peer learning and informal interactions among faculty and participants.

To refresh body and mind, we offer dining created by our award-winning culinary chef who happily caters to special dietary requests and requirements. Our participants have access to Northwestern University’s state-of-the-art athletic complex and recreational facilities. The Evanston campus location along the Lake Michigan shoreline offers spectacular views and miles of biking and jogging paths.
Neuroscience research confirms that no one can create insights on demand. We can, however, increase the likelihood an insight will emerge by shutting out extraneous inputs and data. Our immersive environment does this with learning and living spaces created specifically for an executive education experience.
The University campus and the vibrant Evanston neighborhood serve up an abundance of cultural, entertainment and dining options. Chicago, a global hub of art, sports, entertainment and commerce, lies just minutes away by public transportation.
